Hemingway in Lausanne

Like many Anglo-American writers before him, Hemingway visited Lausanne and its surrounding areas many times, especially during his Paris years, and like many of them he used the Alpine landscapes of Lausanne as a setting for his fiction. Indeed, since the times of the Grand Tour, Lausanne had served as a crossroads and a place of inspiration for men and women of arts and letters. Painters, such as Turner, historians, such as Gibbons, poets, such as Shelley and Byron, food critic, M.F.K. Fisher, and many famous American writers, including James Fenimore Cooper, Henry James, Gertrude Stein, Vladimir Nabokov, and, of course, Ernest Hemingway himself have sojourned, lived, and worked in Lausanne or nearby. Lausanne and the surrounding areas are clearly associated with intense and extraordinary experience for Hemingway. As a journalist for the Toronto Star, he covered the international peace conference after the Greco-Turkish war, and later he visited the area with Hadley for winter sport. It was on the way to the Lausanne station that Hadley lost a valise with Ernest’s early manuscripts, and as reported in A Moveable Feast, Hemingway associated the area with the beginning of the end of his marriage to Hadley. In his fiction, Hemingway set the end of A Farewell to Arms in Lausanne and the spectacular landscapes of Montreux only ten miles away. Swiss landscapes also provided the backdrop for some of his most memorable short fiction, including “Cross Country Snow” and “Homage to Switzerland.”

Conference Theme

With “Hemingway’s Extreme Geographies,” the organizers wish to prompt a consideration of the ways the experience of space and geography—its physical, psychological, and emotional dimensions— informs Hemingway’s writing. Hemingway had an acute sense of space and its evocative capabilities. One may easily recall many instances of this in his work: his claim in A Moveable Feast that he had to come to Paris to write about Michigan; the vivid description of the crossing of the Pyrenees in The Sun Also Rises; the evocation and subversion of masculine identity in his African or Cuban fiction and non-fiction; the charred landscape, clear streams, and swamp of “Big Two-Hearted River.” Switzerland is similarly treated in narratives such as “Cross-Country Snow,” where Nick Adams probes the limits of geography and of physical and psychological balance as a skier in the Swiss Alps and as an American father-to-be. By the same token, his autobiographical narration of the Paris years ends with considerations on marriage and train schedules, that is, on life, death, time and space: “when I got back to Paris I should have caught the first train from the Gare de l’Est that would take me down to Austria. But the girl I was in love with was in Paris then, and I did not take the first train, or the second or the third.” Hemingway also wrote about the geography of the body—the way it imposes its own limits and topography by being marked, scarred, or gendered. Even Hemingway’s sentences, grammar and syntax, suggest the importance of the material space of the story and the terrain of the words on the page.
Proposals
Organizers encourage participants to interpret the conference theme broadly. We welcome proposals on all aspects of Hemingway’s artistic and existential experience, but we are particularly interested in contributions that explore Hemingway’s penchant for intense experiences in liminal spaces (physical and psychological) as a starting point for his writing.

Topics of the conference may include but are not limited to the following themes:

Physical Geographies:
- Switzerland as a place of encounter and dis-encounter
- Africa, Cuba, Switzerland, Spain, France, and the place of the “other”
- The Gulf Stream, Key West, Michigan, The American West
- Ketchum, and the unhomeliness of home
- Warscapes (WWI, Spanish Civil War, WWII)
- Aviation, traveling
- Boundary crossing (literal and figurative)
- The bodily experience of space; the jubilant/sensual and the injured body
- The geographies of sports
- The gendering and the ethics of topography
- The carnivalesque
- Hemingway and the Romantic tradition

Internal Geographies:
- The literary space:
  - Hemingway’s sentences
  - The art of omission
  - Narrative lines and narrative interruptions
  - The space of Hemingway’s paragraph
  - A room with a view: the construction of aesthetics in Hemingway’s writing
- The space identity (gender, racial, public):
  - Remorse; or, the land of the past
  - Regeneration through violence
  - Masculine territories and the frontier of the “other”
  - The construction of Authorship and the defense of authorial territory
- Other issues:
  - Materialism and idealism—the world here and now and worlds beyond
  - Hemingway and religious sentiment
  - The crisis of reality and unreality of reality
  - Existentialism and mysticism
  - The sublimation of injury and the extreme spaces of experience
  - The experience of beauty and the sublime; or, Hemingway and the (post-) Romantic tradition
  - The extremes of the reception of Hemingway
  - Reading Hemingway in Africa, Europe, Asia

An Interactive Conference
The conference organizers are interested in creating a conference experience that stresses interaction and exchange. For this reason, we hope to mix traditional three-paper panels and plenary sessions with workshops and expert-led seminars. Of course, traditional panel proposals and individual paper proposals are welcome, but we encourage individuals or groups of aficionados to consider proposing a panel or a workshop. All proposals are due by Sept. 15, 2009. All proposals should be sent to the conference organizers (Suzanne del Gizzo and Boris Vejdovsky) at hemingway2010@comcast.net.

For more information on proposing a paper, panel or workshop, please visit: http://home.comcast.net/~hemingway2010/ or email the conference organizers at hemingway2010@comcast.net.
