

Marie-Claude Desjardins is a Professor at the Faculty of Law of the University of Sherbrooke (Canada). She is a Principal Researcher at the Legal Research Chair in Food Diversity and Security. She specializes in international labour, sustainable development and consumer law, access to justice and corporate social responsibility. Her current research focuses on alternative forms of regulation as a way to ensure environmental protection and social development. She has been working on fair trade certification from a legal perspective for more than ten years.